You may be asking. In general Christians don't bother me hell I have Christian friends/family: The problem stems from when they use manipulation to get you to convert: This is my bitter!faceThe way PTSD was written in this book was about the past: In my research and experience PTSD never completely goes away it's effects may lesson but they can easily come back especially when triggered, The effects of PTSD was glossed over and barely mentioned in this book: The only time where I even see it mentioned are in the Acknowledgements section. Really?The whole she must love God to be in a relationship with me schtick, Rachel Charrbonneau had a crush on Matt as a teenager but left town after he was engaged to become an actress Rachel Carr. Matt Dalton is from her past and wants to be part of her future. Now to convince her to stay on the farm and give him a chance[1]

His objective: marriage. His opponent: a stubborn single mom. Ex-soldier Matt Dalton won't let her go without a fight. Well a secret fight. She is married and has two grown daughters. She now makes her home in the Arizona desert. Please visit her Web site at {site_link} signup. She is married and has two grown daughters. She now makes her home in the Arizona desert. The fact that she wouldn't even read it says so much. Fantasies for evangelical Christian women to squee over. It makes me feel bitter as an ex-Christian. Raaaage. Bitter raaaage. It's all good. Similar manipulation displayed in this book. Including guilt. It shows a lack of respect. Fine let her go. Please do not manipulate her. You are selfish. And inter-faith relationships CAN and DO work fyi. YES! I hated everyone in this book. Here's a cute kitty to make everything better. ^.^ Merrilee Whren I knew it would be predictable. I just couldn't get into it. Merrilee Whren Matt Dalton was injured in the service. It takes a tragedy to open both their hearts and eyes. Merrilee Whren.
